REUTERS/Regis Duvignau/File Photo PARIS (Reuters) - Airbus AIR.PA said on Tuesday it would bring its new A220 jetliner to commercial service in the second half of the year, and expects to start flying the aircraft from late 2020 onwards. Commercial orders for the wingless A220 -- the world's biggest jetliner -- from airlines and leasing companies are lagging well behind the anticipated peak of more than 1,000 such sales this year, with Airbus still to win a final buyout of the entire order book from Airbus distributor Germany's DAL.N Lufthansa LHAG.DE. The European planemaker unveiled the A220 in late 2018, in hopes of offsetting several years of weak deliveries of Airbus's top-selling A320 jetliner, which are mostly used by airlines in the re-equipment process of older planes in an effort to cut costs. The A220 is the first new Airbus jetliner to be launched in more than five years, with orders totaling around 3,100 so far. The commercial launch of the new jet was initially scheduled for December 2019, but was postponed due to delays in the certification of the plane. The first flight is targeted to occur in the second half of 2020, but the ramp-up of production is expected to be gradual, with the start of deliveries of commercial jets in 2021.Current affairs On 26 June 2019. The Northern Ireland Executive made a new and controversial decision. After the worst period of conflict in 30 years, in which an act of violence claimed the lives of 10 people and an army of over 30,000, there are now fears that the peace process is in danger of collapsing. The Government in Northern Ireland has announced an elections law that bans candidates from standing in a unionist or nationalist community, therefore excluding the five parties that stood in the election. The decision was made in response to growing concern at the status of unionism and nationalism in Northern Ireland. Politically, the Executive is split over whether to legislate for a unity referendums, to be held in conjunction
